Hydrography : the key to facing the rising tide of climate change, knowing our oceans and understanding our future.

HYDRO18 Conference Director Invitation

As HYDRO18 Conference Director and Chair of the South West Pacific Region of the Australasian Hydrographic Society (AHS), I cordially invite you to attend and participate in the HYDRO18 Conference to be hosted by the AHS at Doltone House, Jones Bay Wharf, Pyrmont, Sydney during 30 October – 2 November 2018.

The Society is hosting this conference to highlight the challenges and opportunities related to climate change for the world through hydrography. The Conference will provide interest whether as a member of the hydrographic industry, policy maker, academic, or layman. We plan to attract about 350 delegates from both this region and overseas and many of us will find opportunities for mutual cooperation and relationships.

The conference and exhibition, with its theme of 'The Climate for Change - Hydrography in the 21st Century' will allow delegates and the hydrographic profession to consider how best to future utilise the science of hydrography to adapt to climate change, resource sustainability and renewable energy requirements. Hydrography is the key to facing the rising tide of climate change, knowing our oceans and understanding our future.

The Society will bring together speakers from varying maritime fields including all of the specialist hydrographic streams, maritime transport, oceanography, offshore exploration, environmental science, maritime heritage, defence, tourism, coastal development, ports and harbours, and government. HYDRO18 will also provide a forum to discuss aspects of the opportunities and challenges facing hydrography. A very large proportion of trade is carried by maritime transport and, along with increasing sea levels, our lives will be affected in some way or another. This international gathering seeks to gain insight into these effects and the opportunities that may arise, as well as provide a platform to show how currently important hydrography and the 'Blue Economy' is globally.

Affiliated with the International Federation of Hydrographic Societies, the AHS is an encompassing learned body administratively comprising of four distinct regions of East Australia, West Australia, New Zealand, and SW Pacific, plus a historical Division - Australia on the Map. The Society provides a SouthWest Pacific and SouthEast Asian regional focus for those interested in hydrography and related sciences. We look forward to attendance from other regional hydrographic societies and allied organisations, such as the International Hydrographic Organisation (IHO) and the International Surveyors Federation (FIG).

The Australasian Hydrographic Society and I look forward to your support, participation, and attendance at this important and relevant event. Further details of the Conference and Trade Exhibition will be posted on the HYDRO18 website (hydro18.ahs.asn.au) and Society's website (www.ahs.asn.au) during the next few months.

The event will offer a unique opportunity for us all to gather in the warm weather of the southern hemisphere and grapple with the current and future issues, while informing ourselves of developments and making new alliances and friendships. Please plan to join us - we look forward to welcoming you and your colleagues to the HYDRO18 Conference.

Australasian Hydrographic Society President Invitation

As President of the Australasian Hydrographic Society (AHS), I am very pleased to invite and welcome you to the HYDR018 Conference and Trade Exhibition being held at Doltone House, Jones Bay Wharf, Pyrmont in Sydney, Australia during 30 October – 2 November 2018. As a member of the International Federation of Hydrographic Societies, the Society is hosting this important conference that will highlight the challenges and opportunities related to climate change for the world through hydrography.

I encourage you to participate whether as a member of the hydrographic industry, policy maker, academic, or layman to focus on the Blue Economy. The conference and exhibition, with its theme of 'The Climate for Change – Hydrography in the 21st Century' will allow delegates and the hydrographic profession to consider how best to utilise the science of hydrography in the future to adapt to climate change, sustainable resource usage and renewable energy requirements.

Affiliated with the International Federation of Hydrographic Societies, the AHS is an encompassing learned body administratively comprising of four distinct regions of East Australia, West Australia, New Zealand, and SW Pacific, and also includes the historical Division, Australia on the Map. The Society provides a SouthWest Pacific and SouthEast Asian regional focus for those interested in hydrography and related sciences. We look forward to attendance from other regional hydrographic societies and allied organisations, such as the International Hydrographic Organisation (IHO) and the International Surveyors Federation (FIG).

I look forward to your support and meeting you at the HYDR018 & Trade Exhibition.

Australasian Hydrographic Society Patron Invitation

The Australasian Hydrographic Society has a successful history of conferences addressing the many challenges to our understanding of the oceans and seas, which give life to our planet. In November 2018 the Society's HYDR018 Conference and Trade Exhibition in Sydney, Australia, will tackle aspects of what is perhaps the biggest global challenge we face in the 21st century - climate change. The conference will explore climate change as it relates to the science of hydrography, resource sustainability, and renewable energy. This is hydrography at the leading edge, facing up to issues that will impact on each and every one of us, so it promises to be a conference of great relevance and interest to all.

As patron of the Australasian Hydrographic Society it is my pleasure in conjunction with the Society's President and the Conference Director to invite you to join us in Sydney as we explore this most important theme. In the course of the week you will be able to mix with a wide range of professionals from all aspects of the maritime industry and a list of expert speakers who will thoroughly explore the interactions between hydrography and climate change.

Most importantly, you can be assured of a warm welcome and a professionally and socially rewarding experience on the shores of iconic Sydney Harbour. A great venue and a conference addressing one of the most pressing problems of the day; I look forward to meeting you there.

International Federation of Hydrographic Societies President

The globe is a dynamic place. Our search for welfare, wealth and security offers many opportunities for global trade and cooperation. New avenues open up daily through the invention of exiting new technologies.

But it comes at a price. Geopolitical competition for space, food and commodities, for energy and drink water pose ever increasing risks for the sustainable protection and development of our planet. The globe is a dynamic place. Our search for welfare, wealth and security offers many opportunities for global trade and cooperation. New avenues open up daily through the invention of exiting new technologies.

But it comes at a price. Geopolitical competition for space, food and commodities, for energy and drink water pose ever increasing risks for the sustainable protection and development of our planet.

Climate change as a consequence of mankind's activities has become undisputable today and raises major questions towards our future development. With our oceans and our atmosphere so closely intertwined in climate processes, it's more than obvious, that the world oceans, the coastal regions and the inland waters have come into focus in these discussions. And who, but the international hydrographic community would be able to face and to tackle the new challenges and opportunities emanating from global change.

As President of the International Federation of Hydrographic Societies (IFHS), it is my pleasure and privilege to introduce to you the HYDR018 Conference and Trade Exhibition on 'The Climate for Change – Hydrography in the 21st Century'.

Our host and IFHS fellow society, the Australasian Hydrographic Society (AHS) will hold this important international event in Sydney, Australia from October, 30th – until November, 2nd 2018. At the wonderful location of Doltone House, Jones Bay Wharf, Pyrmont ample opportunities will be provided to learn, discuss and seek for new answers on the manifold of today's global and maritime changes.

Climate change is a global challenge and it thus needs global answers. HYDR018 therefore explicitly addresses the whole of the international hydrographic and adjacent communities - awaiting representatives from policy and legal institutions, maritime and transport administrations, trade and industry, research and education.

Hydrographers are the ocean discoverers and custodians, the planners and managers, the creative framers and engineers of our marine environment. Collecting, analysing and disseminating maritime information is what we do. And the HYDR0 series of international conferences and HYDR018 is the opportunity to underpin this central role of hydrography - not just to the hydrographic community.

On behalf of the International Federation of Hydrographic Societies and the Australasian Hydrographic Society we all look forward to welcome you at HYDR018.

Holger Klindt
President ~ International Federation of Hydrographic Societies

About the Australasian Hydrographic Society

The Australasian Hydrographic Society is the SouthWest Pacific and SouthEast Asian regional focus for those interested in hydrography and related sciences. The recent and extraordinary progress in oceanology means that the maritime industry and undersea exploration will be to this century, which aviation and aerospace exploration was to the last. In our region in particular, hydrographic and related information increasingly facilitates the generation, sustainment, and transportation of resources.

Similarly, in the recent past there has been an examination of the security of regional interests, both in the private and public domains. There has been a growing acknowledgment amongst maritime services, such as police, customs, and regional navies, that accurate hydrographic data in the littoral environment is fundamental to providing security, protection, and humanitarian support.

The objectives of the Society are:

- To promote the science of surveying in the saltwater and freshwater environments, the adjacent shore and hinterland and to promote related sciences.
- To provide a centre for meetings and a channel for correspondence and the exchange of information between technologists and others engaged or interested in hydrography and related sciences.
- To promote and co-ordinate the study and practice of such sciences in all or any of their aspects; and to accumulate, extend and disseminate amongst the members of the Society and others information, knowledge and expertise relating thereto.
- To promote the better education and training of persons engaged in or intending to engage in the study of hydrography and related sciences.

In this challenging time of climate change, sea level rise and resource sustainability, it is apparent that hydrography, its associated skills and related sciences are fundamental to meeting the challenge. Hydrography is seen as being able to bridge the gaps in understanding our maritime world and meeting the challenges confronting the marine environment and adjacent land areas, where few other lines of communication may exist. This is due to hydrography and the like being increasingly acknowledged as egalitarian in purpose and therefore humanitarian in the broadest sense. This is not new, but the extent of acknowledgement is.

The Australasian Hydrographic Society is committed to facilitating cooperative and knowledge-based sharing activities between learned bodies and individuals to help support these interests. Through technical meetings, seminars and conferences, the Society achieves these aims in equal measure and supports all initiatives of regional, national, or international flavour that supports the science and profession of hydrography.

The Australasian Hydrographic Society is a foundation and supporting member of the International Federation of Hydrographic Societies.
